White Mirror - Episode 6: Karma Police

The episode opens with a humorous anecdote of Monkey in Thailand, illustrating "instant karma" after a petty theft. The opening sequence blends cultural and musical quotes on police and revolution, with Yoda proclaiming the meeting of "D.Dream" and "D.Truth."

In 2016 in Rishikesh, a philosophical debate on karma and happiness pits Siddhartha against Monkey and Mamie Coco, exploring divine justice, reincarnation, and spiritual awakening, ending with a peace mantra.

An ad showcases the DTC's "Dream Truth Pack," offering autonomy (land, free energy, robots) to Sadakah members, based on reputation via $D.Worth.

In a liberated Palestinian farm, Momo and his family, aided by Karma Bots inspired by ninjas (Naruto, etc.), neutralize Zionist aggressors through a secure virtual intervention.

Another ad promotes "D.Truth Justice" on DT TV, judging cases live with citizen participation.

Eight years after "the Announcement," at the DTC rehabilitation center in Tibet, criminals (former Zionists) complete an education phase in yoga and Buddhism, embracing redemption through yoga, kung-fu, and farming, guided by Racailleou and Rabbi Jacob.

The episode ends with "Karma Police" music. Post-credits: Monkey chats on Signal with a contact named "Loki" about the DTC plan.

Themes: Karma as justice, redemption, technology serving peace in a utopian DTC world.
